

‘Remembering Garden of Epicurus’

A Greek philosopher, Epicurus, taught about the ingredient of happiness, and for him it was friendship. He established school of philosophy in a house he bought, and outside in the garden was the school’s meeting place. The school resembled in many ways as a community of friends living together.

This mini exhibition, entitled ‘Remembering Garden of Epicurus’, showcases Ayu Arista Murti’s works about her personal journey, especially taken from her Garden series. The works being exhibited do not talk about mythological stories but trying to question ourself and to bring inspirational ideas about human relationship with nature, the ideal human living space that is healthy and respectful; emanating like the spirit of Epicurus where the garden was the place to share his thoughts, as well as a sustainable therapeutic place for the living system.
