AGUNG MANGU PUTRA

Within a short span of time since the beginning of his artistic career, Mangu Putra has caused more than a stir in his exhibitions throughout Indonesia. A graphic designer before turning into full-time painting in 1998, his paintings exude acuteness and sensitivity to visual forms.

Mangu rarely adheres to one style of painting. He shifts between abstraction, figuration and realistic rendering, all of which contribute to his coherent yet diverse oeuvre. This wide variety of approaches ranges from a nearly perfect imitation of a noisy photograph to an extremely hyper-realistic rendition of trees verging on the point of abstraction. Although some of his works may seem true-to-life, they usually appear strangely artificial, attractive and overly idealistic. His vision of the world is hence, not a natural one but rather, a version that is contaminated by society.

His dramatic visual language is instantly recognizable with its unique depictions of contemporary life, and its relation to the mythologies of a centuries-old Javanese and animist past and the high-speed, hyper-connected lifestyle of the 21st century, layered with social, political and sexual critique, revealing a complex picture of the human condition.

Movement, expansion, circularity, and the relationship between geometric and organic are constants throughout the artist's practice. He uses structural imagery as a metaphor for identifying ourselves in space and time. Additionally, structure is a template for social, intellectual, work and virtually every aspect of our daily lives.

GATOT INDRAJATI

(b. 1980)

Gatot has been fascinated with wood since a young age, creating his own toys because he couldn't afford the metal or plastic figures available in the market. While pursuing higher education at the Indonesian Institute of the Arts (Institut Seni Indonesia - ISI), wood became the primary medium for his sculptures.

Gatot is the only artist to have won the UOB Painting of the Year award twice—first in 2011 and again in 2016. Not only did he win the award for a second time, but his artwork Right or Wrong My Home was also selected as the Painting of the Year at the regional level. His depiction of wooden toys on canvas serves as a critique of society, where dolls and toys become metaphors for those who are manipulated or controlled by others—an aspect present in society yet rarely acknowledged.

His works give these toys a “second life,” while also providing Gatot with a platform to express his views on the social issues he observes in the community.
